

Pictures of the new NeXtime collection 2012 leaked before official introduction date

At more or less the same time, a company in Germany (<http://blog.wanduhr.de/>) and a company in Taiwan (<http://www.facebook.com/bluestone.intl/> / album:<http://www.facebook.com/media/set/?set=a.326859880676561.91830.146334498729101&type=1>) published pictures which several sources believe is one of the new clocks in the NeXtime collection of 2012: the Wall Pad.

NeXtime's marketing manager, Marije Guillaumond, does not wish to comment on the leaked pictures that surfaced on the websites of these companies but evidence is building that the pictures may in fact be genuine. "Just prior to the release of our new collection there is always plenty of heated speculation", she only wants to comment. There have been previous reports, rumors, and leaks, but the pictures of what is presumably a new NeXtime clock makes us wonder about other exciting designs in their 2012 collection.

NeXtime is about to introduce their new 2012 collection 5 January on Facebook (<http://www.facebook.com/NeXtime.clocks>). It is common practice in the industry to show a new collection at the major fairs. It is for the first time that NeXtime does not show their new items at these trade fairs but on Facebook first.
